Continuation of Substance of Interview including description of the general nature of what was agreed to if an agreement was reached, or any other comments: There seems to be agreement that the prior art teaches graphical design tools for creating speech dialogs that have links to the Internet. However, applicant argues that the prior art does not teach creating such links limited to a web page. The Examiner argues that given a link with the Internet, one of pedestrian skill with Internet programming would find it obvious to implement such links using one or more web pages. This is shown by Marx's links to an Internet Server provider on the Internet to access necessary combinations of hardware and software (col. 6). Implementing this using a web page is taught by Butler's internet server software linked from a web page (column 3) in combination with other graphical links (column 4) associated with the Internet and hypermedia commonly available through web site access.
